Developed for the Yahoo! Widget Engine, Battery Monitor is a small widget that displays the current status of your notebook battery. It can be easily installed and set up. The interface of the tool is represented by a tiny frame that you can move to any position on the screen with the help of the mouse cursor. If the notebook is not currently plugged in, Battery Monitor shows a progress bar with the battery level, together with the remaining minutes till it is depleted. Otherwise, the meter shows the estimated time till the battery is fully charged. Plenty of configuration settings are available through the Widget Preferences screen. For example, you can enable the widget to beep every 5 seconds when the battery is about to be depleted, adjust the frame size, as well as specify the "low battery" and "depleted" warning levels. But you may also establish the auto-level default setting (when the battery is charged or charging, along with the charge and discharge time

(when the battery time compatibility mode is enabled). The simple-to-use widget is low-demanding when it comes to the CPU and system memory, so it does not interfere with the runtime of active processes. However, Battery Monitor may take a while to calculate time until the notebook is fully charged or discharged. Other than that, we have not experienced any problems throughout our testing. All in all, Battery Monitor comes packed with plenty of settings to satisfy the entire audience. Rate this comment: Advanced mode allows to customize tool behavior. * Battery level: * A bar will be drawn which is updated in the real-time. * After the discharging the bar will go to red color. *

STORY OF THE PEOPLE O
PEDAGOGU The word “pedagogue” means the pedagogy is concerned, the history of pedagogy is very interesting. This discipline should be called “pedagogy of the child”. We may speak of pedagogy in this way. The history of pedagogy is very rich. From the antiquity we know that pedagogues existed. Pedagogues were in charge of the education of young children. As far as the ancient pedagogues are concerned, we know that they were distinguished by special skills and knowledge. The pedagogy from the antiquity was divided into two main branches: the pedagogic and the sociological. This differentiation was connected with the difference of the role which pedagogues played in society. They were not only teachers of young children but also leaders and thinkers. Their main activity was to influence people's way of life. The teachers from the early ages were greatly distinguished by their skills. They were the ones who set children's minds ablaze with learning. They always hoped that they could arouse the children's interest and sense of responsibility. They had to be exceptional in order to teach their pupils. Some of them were considered as exceptional teachers. They were those who met the highest standards and were characterized by the best skills. They were like stars. They were distinguished by their intellectual abilities. They were people who were raised above all others. They were people that children dreamed of. Because of their great skills, some teachers managed to convey themselves so that they became legends. The most popular teachers of the past ages were Plato and Socrates. Plato was considered as a great man who was regarded as the founder of the Western philosophy. Plato was a philosopher who was an ideal educator. He believed that children should learn before they were born. This meant that his teachings were mainly meant for the mother and for the father of the child. During the classical antiquity, the role of pedagogues was mainly theoretical. They were always concerned with the pedagogic theory. They carried out research. They were quite often connected with the State. They were more popular among the people. They always acted in accordance with the state ideology. They were not
