This invention relates to a color diffusion transfer process. Nylon containing fibers have been used as filtration materials, in oil-water separators and the like. However, these nylon containing filtration materials tend to lose strength, and they have poor wear characteristics. Attempts have been made to obtain nylon containing filtration materials by forming the nylon as a film or coating on a suitable supporting substance, and separating the nylon containing layer from the support. However, such films have tended to delaminate or crack. Attempts have also been made to obtain nylon containing filtration materials by coating the support with a mixture of nylon polymer and a plasticizer, and subsequently calendaring the coated support to provide a uniform thickness of nylon containing layer. However, such a process provides nylon containing coatings which are brittle and subject to cracking. It has now been found that filter material containing nylon can be prepared in the form of a film, or as a coating on a suitable support, which is highly resistant to delamination and cracking. According to the invention there is provided a color diffusion transfer process for producing a photographic element comprising the steps of, (a) coating the element with a layer containing an infrared radiation absorptive element in combination with a polyamide; and, (b) subsequently irradiating the element with infrared radiation. According to a preferred embodiment of the process the polyamide comprises the resin composition described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,863,871. The element is preferably a photographic element in which the radiation absorptive material is incorporated into the side of the support facing the layer of photographic element. In a preferred embodiment of the invention the infrared absorbing material is contained in a sublayer of the photographic element. In an alternative preferred embodiment the photographic element is provided with an exposure layer, which contains the infrared radiation absorbing material, on its support side. Such exposure layers are commonly referred to as antihalation layer. The element is preferably a photographic element in which the radiation absorptive material is incorporated into the side of the support facing the layer of photographic element. The photographic element is preferably a color photographic element which may be processed in the photographic
