My year with the Lightroom CC was personally a positive experience. I didn't have any issues upgrading, finding solutions to problems, or finding solutions to problems I created. It's also incredibly easy to use. I discovered that the new Lightroom CC is a lot more powerful than the previous version, and I'm looking forward to trying Lightroom for Photography with a Film Panel next. It's all about you in Adobe Sensei, which means if you want to sell more, you really get to be more effective. My shopping list is filled with the tools I'll be using to make the most of that (and ensure you get what you expect from AI -- and only what you expect). I'll keep you updated. Overall, I'm extremely happy with Lightroom 5. I think you will be, too. The features and workflow improvement are great, and the new Navigator view is a really nice touch. I don't think you'll be disappointed, and you'll soon upgrade to the latest version of Photoshop CC without thinking at all. Productivity per dollar is, again, exceptionally high. The features the upgrade brings are the kind of improvements that you can appreciate an entire year after upgrading. And, it's a super easy upgrade process. It just works. still in Early Beta. There are still spots where you'll see an additional toolbar, but these will be rectified soon. You'll be able to see all your Adobe components in one place after you set up your Adobe ID. This is the way things should be right now. What It Does: The Dodge and Burn tools work with the same strategy used with the eraser tool. The Dodge tool lights up areas that already have an existing color. The Burn tool, on the other hand, uses the colors of the existing pixels to create new ones. You can create some really interesting images with some simple edits. e3d0a04c9c
