You will usually find this file in the folder where you installed the software. If you do not know where this folder is on your system, you can simply type in C: into the search bar of your computer. Once you have found this file, you can click on it to run the software. You do not need to install any sort of anti-viruses or firewalls when you are installing the software. Photoshop will detect these automatically and remove them if they are not compatible with the software.

For me, this year's release is one of the easiest upgrades I've had in years. Yes, there are some irritations (which I will note) but for the most part I am happy and don't notice that I dropped from almost 7 years of use to about 5. I also don't even know if I've used more than 1/5th of the updates in the new release. And I'm not a beta tester. I've taken the same approach as PS users, go at my own pace. Let me say that I'm not a fan of the new "Smart Previews". They seem slow and clunky. If you are using one of these tools, they are practically unusable. But, certain users may not be able to live without them. So, your mileage may vary. Ever since I started working on this product, I was always in the "thinking about" phase. There were so many things to consider and so many decisions to make. Some of them I was certain about, some of them I was not so certain (even though I was planning on doing that).

Now that it is actually out there in the world, I'm learning so much more about what customers want and need. I get a lot of advice from my avid users like you guys! Just to finish this off... I really think that the most interesting question is the question for the UX folks is "what kind of User should we be creating?". I've been thinking a lot about this myself and I think it heavily depends on the plans that you have and how much time you're willing to invest in the new product. It is really exciting for me to design a User that I feel would be amazing on the new product but on paper it may not be user friendly, unavoidable, or easy to use. So, in Annabelle, I was thinking about the new product from a very specific point of view. I want to be able to finish projects quickly and smoothly, and to get the best UX possible, I've made a lot of compromises here. I feel it would be an incredible shame to sacrifice the amazing quality of the new experience for the sake of being familiar.

While you have a lot of tools and features here, balancing my time with what I want to do with this project has been a very hard decision. Sometimes I have to admit I make compromises to get things done faster and finish them sooner. I'm testing a lot of users and seeing what works best for them.
